Yesterday evening, my mother cried, several minutes after I showed her this photo of me with my colleagues having an after work last Monday...

Hey there Aymeric!

Thank you for your long email from the other day, I'm sorry I haven't had a chance to respond, been very busy lately!

That is a lovely picture and I can only imagine your mother was crying with joy to see you in a regular situation of contented afternoon socializing after work, as most culture thank you for your long email from the other day, I'm sorry I haven't had a chance to respond, been very busy lately!

Made me really happy too...

Gus and I was so glad to hear you have found a job and things are going good...

Don't ponder that girl from the past, my advice is to start a new with the life you have ahead of you in France ☺☀

I'm sorry the previous email showed a paragraph repeating itself, I'm not sure why that is? I didn't notice it until I reread it I had sent it already...

Hi Deb!

I am sorry I shouldn't have sent this email. I woke up in the night, because I understood why she cried, and I needed to share. After reading your email I realize the misunderstanding. But, it's normal as you don't know the nice conversation I had with my mother.

It will be weird and crazy:

I showed the photo to her. And I told her the name of each of my colleagues. She stopped on one name and ask me to repeat. She was surprised. It was like she expected to see someone else.

Quite the same for my father when he saw the photo.

I know that some people think I am with a girl leaving in Orléans. And I realized my mother was in contact with Lionel (one of my friends) weeks ago. Now, I'm quite sure of it. This guy made my parents believe in lies about me. And they realized Yesterday that he lied. He certainly said that he saw the girl on the photo, and my parents believed it. This is why my mother cried Yesterday.

I know it sounds hard to believe. That's why I regret to have written about that.

I won't bother you about that anymore.

I look like crazy enough like that.

It was not really for me if I sent this email..

Thank you for your comment about the photo. Yes, I do regular things as most as I can...

Sorry again

Best,

Aymeric
